Butch:

I do believe it is in the Director's best interest to try to talk to members of the Senior Seminar on 25, 24, or 23 May. This is a group of 18 senior officers who hold important positions and can influence a considerable number of employees. For positive reasons I believe the Director should speak to the group and, if he cannot do so, I fear his failure to do so will be unhappily noted.

There is one possible alternative. If it would make it more convenient, I can endeavor to give you some optional times when the Director can speak to them in Washington. If this would be helpful, let me know.

Background: The CIA Senior Seminar, held twice a year for a group of senior Agency officers, GS-15 and above, is a nine-week program dealing with the current problems and activities of the Agency and the Intelligence Community, current key issues in foreign affairs and on the domestic scene, and the role of the senior officer as manager. Traditionally, the Director of Central Intelligence has been invited to meet with the Seminar members on their final evening together for a social hour, dinner, informal presentation, and exchange of views. Alternate suggested dates would be the evenings of Tuesday, 24 May, or Monday, 23 May. Your appearance would provide a most fitting capstone to the Agency's most senior training program.
